

Junior Indirect Tax Consultant

Few things have the same impact on governments, individuals, companies and other organisations as taxes. Benjamin Franklin already recognised it to be one of life's certainties in 1789.

Would you like to be part of the ever-changing and globalising world of tax matters? Helping some of the most fascinating companies and individuals on the planet to deal with their taxes will allow you to develop yourself throughout your career in a challenging and international environment. Your skills and creativity will contribute to solving complex issues and will generate new planning ideas for our clients. Plenty of opportunities are there for you to seize them!

At the start, you will choose between corporate, indirect or personal tax or for the combination of accounting and tax. Later on, you can always apply for a swap to one of the other focus areas within our firm.

In our Indirect Tax Department, you will deal with international and national indirect taxes, predominantly VAT and customs duties, typically in cross-border settings. Clients range from the largest multinationals to not-for-profit organisations, even public bodies and public private partnerships. Content-wise your advice may relate to structuring and streamlining indirect taxes across the supply chain, optimising the indirect tax footprint and minimising tax leakages, up to litigation.

Qualifications

- You have a bachelor's degree in accountancy/taxation or law practice or a master's degree in law, (applied) economics, commercial engineering or business studies.
- A qualification in tax would be a bonus. Otherwise, you are willing to take evening classes, if necessary.
- You are graduating this academic year or have a maximum of two years' experience.
- You are a motivated and dynamic team player with an eye for detail and an eagerness to learn. You are able to work on your own and have a good sense of responsibility. Sounds like your profile? Then you could be the person we're looking for!
